

Navigating Change & Sprint Resilience

Collective reflections on scope pivots, proactive inquiry, and continuous adaptation.

TEAM MEMBERS

[Thach le] • [Elad Bogle] • [Alex Smith] • Miles Harris . Araceli Andrade

What Did You Learn Through This Activity?

Core lessons uncovered as requirements evolved during active development.

Dynamic Requirements

Project scopes shift unexpectedly.

Navigating Ambiguity

Solutions require independent validation.

Starting Over Early

Pivoting prevents compounding debt.

Rapid Team Alignment

Shared consensus accelerates recovery.

Key Takeaway: Rather than seeking a single textbook answer, our team built resilience by embracing change as a core design input.

If You Were to Try This Again What Might You Do Differently?

Strategic course corrections and foundational changes for future iterations.

STEP 01 • UPFRONT DISCOVERY

Ask Deeper Questions Early

Interrogate ambiguities during Sprint 0.

Uncovers implicit expectations before code commits.

STEP 02 • ARCHITECTURE

Frame a Broader Foundation

Avoid rigid, single-discipline constraints.

Protects the core structure from sudden restarts.

STEP 03 • CADENCE

Compress Review Cycles

Validate small increments frequently.

Catches misalignment before complete rebuilds occur.

 Collective Decision: Future sprints will prioritize expansive scoping over hyper-specialized assumptions.

What Did You Learn About Agile Project Management?

Real-world agile execution vs. rigid linear project management.

Adaptability > Rigid Plans

Responding to change beats following plans.

Low-Cost Pivot Cycles

Incremental sprints keep restarts manageable.

Continuous Discovery

True requirements emerge during execution.

Agile mindsets transform friction: starting over is a discovery milestone, not a failure.
